THE BODY TRIES TO GIVE ITSELF UP

Who goes first and who should be last is it the right of the feet which brought us here to hold out until the end or of the hands which opened the doors held the ropes and turned the pages we couldn't have done without them or the eyes not always reliable but they led the way and we could not have done without them can we count on the voice to plead the case of the others with an eloquence equal to its own and will it be necessary to attempt more delicate divisions fingers from hands nails from fingers at the end could we choose between the left eye and the other or one word and another when we're told how many remain to be spoken
